Excerpt from Experiments in Orchard Management in New England The object of the orchard in the - first place is to produce fruit. If we are to expect tree growth when the tree is young and a sustaining productive growth when mature, we must render the conditions favorable for such results. Just how much and often cultivation is needed, and the best means of obtaining it, kinds of implements to use, etc., are open questions. Results are what we are after. If one person can demonstrate that his orchard is more productive than others, we should look into his method of tillage and satisfy ourselves how closely it can be applied to our conditions. The nature of the soil is of great importance in considering this question. Our soil may require constant cultivation or tillage in order to get desirable tree growth; while another with comparatively little attention may be very responsive. As a rule, however, it is an exceptional orchard that gives satisfactory results without receiving occasional tillage. Some lands, in fact many in New England, are too...
