In the President s mansion, at Washington, his lifeless form rests in the sleep that knows no waking: he has ceased from his cares and anxieties; he is at peace, while a weeping people bows before God in the bitterness of grief. From the breathless stillness of the nation, watching the current of events; from the shout of victory, now and then interrupting the silence; from the agony of suspense over the question, whether the transition from war to peace can be successfully made, he has taken his departure - the foremost man in interest and in responsibility, - he has laid down his office, he has gone to give his account at the bar above; he has gone, we may hope, to sit down with that Jesus whom, he has said, he loved.
