CHAPTER VIII ONE morning, about three years after his conviction, Costantino awoke in a bad humour. The heat was oppressive, and the air of the cell was heavy and sickening. One of the prisoners was snoring and puffing like a kettle letting off steam. Costantino had slept with Giovanna s last letter beneath his head, and a sad little letter it was; short, and depressing in the extreme. She told of her and her mother s dire poverty, and of the boy s serious illness. It never occurred to Costantino to reflect how cruel it was to write to him in this strain; he wanted to know the truth about them, however bad it might be, and he felt that to share all Giovanna s sorrows and to agonise over his inability to help her was a part of his duty. A barren duty, -- alas!--merely an increase of his misery. He had become quite deft at his trade of shoemaking, and worked rapidly, but he could make very little money; all that was left, however, after the King of Spades had been paid for his supposed good offices he sent to Giovanna. Upon my word, said the ex-marshal, you are a goose. Spend it on yourself. They ought to be sending you money. But they are so poor. Poor! Not they; haven t they got the sun? What more do they want? said the other. If you would only eat and drink...
