Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Curriculum of the Model and Training School, Vol. 7: August, 1919 Since the making of an elementary school curriculum is merely an effort to print a fairly adequate statement as to the materials and methods used in directing children through a period of living and learning, with added exhibits of results and of the mechanics of some of the processes used in getting these results, it is important that an effort should be made beforehand to indicate the ideas back of this curriculum making. The principal idea back of this particular curriculum is that of synthesis, -not of a series of compromises but of a genuine synthesis of necessity and of aspiration. The ideal home achieves a synthesis of the lives of the children in the home, interested chiefly in their play, and the lives of the grown-up members of the family, interested chiefly in their several vocations. This ideal home is the best place possible for both the grown-ups and the children. Each group is better because the presence of the other compels ever recurring daily solution of the problems of home life, and compels a conscious effort to think the whole problem out. The ideal school would be the one that achieved the successful synthesis of the child's desire to do things and to know things and of his inevitably childish way of doing and knowing, with the adult's desire to have the child do and know certain things useful and agreeable to the adult and to society. It is entirely possible to make an approach to this ideal school, since the child knows, probably all too well, that the Situation gives the adult-the right to demand...
