Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The New Country School, 1914: A Survey of Development The Companion s campaign for better rural schools is one of fundamental importance. The future progress of the business of farming is at the present time more dependent upon the organization of an efficient rural school system than upon any other one factor. The colleges of agriculture and experiment stations have demonstrated beyond a doubt new and more profitable systems of farming. These systems of farming require intelligence and training for their execution. - F. B. Mumford, Dean College of Agriculture University of Missouri. The welfare of the country school is inseparably linked not only with the educational interests of country children, but with the prosperity of the basic industry of agriculture. It is the duty of all our people, whether residents of the country or not, to lend their aid to every movement which will tend to create and sustain a country school system that will be so good that no man will find it necessary to remove from his farm home in order to give his children a thorough common school education. - Payson Smith, State Superintendent of Public Schools Maine. Commodious and sightly schoolhouses are community assets. Their scientific construction, convenient arrangement and sanitary appointment make for good health and greater efficiency. Their artistic adornment teaches silent but powerful daily lessons in right living, while spacious and beautiful grounds add to the joys and multiply the opportunities of childhood. Money spent for these things is therefore not an expense, but an investment. - W. D. Ross, State Superintendent of Public Instruction Kansas. Success to The Companion s campaign for the improvement of school grounds and buildings. Such improvements...
